

1. 12ft by 8ft, Spray Paint on Garage. I was asked to paint a piece for the Lilac mural project in San Francisco and decided to do a pursuit of happiness piece. This particular pursuit of happiness piece represent the culmination of feelings you get once you get done with a harsh climb, and you finally get to see the view for the first time. In that moment you realize it was all worth the struggle.
2. 100ft by 20ft, Spray Paint and Enamel. This painting was done in a giant abandoned warehouse space. It is a continuation on the pursuit of happiness theme, and is representing a rough part in that pursuit of happiness.
3. 12ft by 8ft, Spray Paint. Another continuation on the pursuit of happiness theme. This one is calling out to god for answers. A moment we can all relate to in a desperate time of need.
4. 8ft by 15ft, Spray Paint and Enamel. Mother Marry. Another piece I created in a abandoned location. This one has frequent homeless visitors, so I wanted to leave something peaceful behind for them. Something that will allow them to feel human. Something that could potentially lead them from there struggles and into a new life.
5. 18ft by 12ft, Spray Paint. This one is my newest piece in the pursuit of happiness series. I was sponsored for this painting so was able to really branch out and use some colors. I was given 200$ in supplies, and was tested to see what I could paint in one day.
6. 14ft by 10ft. Spray Paint. A cry for help in the pursuit of happiness.

7-10. The remaining paintings are all works on canvas that I feel help display my abilities in proportionally representing what I see, and also my ability to use color in a energetic, and expressive way.
